Chapter 1 by -

I couldn't help but feel empty, it was almost like the frigid cold was slowly freezing my soul. As I walk through the somber woods I can feel the cold damp twigs snap under my bare feet, my feet are wet and filthy from stepping on soggy twigs, leaves, and mud puddles. Baffled but not frightened I continue to walk deeper and deeper into the bleak shadows. After about three minutes i start to see what looks like a candle light being engulfed by the inky shadows of night. i decide to walk in the direction of the fading light. Approaching the glowing orb with, what seems to be, the speed and grace of a zombie with a pickaxe in its leg, i notice a boy. He is crouching down by a path in front of a radiant fire, the sorrow and despair he wore so well was only complemented by the small melancholy flames. I hide behind a small tree watching him slump over the burning logs, my focus flickers back and forth from him to the fire, i think of the warmth that must be radiating from those red logs. I close my eyes and listen to the fire crack, i feel the warmth on my skin, i open my eyes and notice i'm standing in front of the fire. Strange, i don't recall walking out from behind the tree, i look up at the boy who is no longer wearing a face of dejection rather a look of confusion. I study him, he looks no older than me, he appears to be clean although his messy hair and baggy cloths could have fooled anyone. I approach him until i'm about an arm's length away before i sit on the ground with my head down. He continues to stare at me as if he wants to say something but doesn't. I look up at him and give him a weary smile, then i hug my knees to my chest and look down.

Chapter 2 by Tatianna Nigam

I watched her, she moved from the tree to out in front of me. She smiled and then fell asleep. I got my bag that was hidden in the leaves and pulled out 2 blankets- that i stole from father all those months ago- and covered her, I lay beside her and cover myself and wait for sleep to take me...
